What did we talk about last week?

Last week, we talked about disability. We said that disability can be a physical or brain (cognitive) condition that makes some activities difficult for the person.

For example, someone with joint pain can have difficulties standing for a long time. This is a form of a physical disability.

We said that not everyone with a disability needs a wheelchair.

For example, a person who finds it difficult to understand others may have a communication disability. This person has a disability and does not need a wheelchair.

We also said some people's disabilities can be difficult to spot. This is called a hidden disability.

Tonight, we will continue to talk more about disability!

See you all later!
